ABOUT ME

My journey into development started with a passion for building things and understanding how technology works. I began with front-end development, learning the fundamentals of HTML, CSS, and JavaScript, and gradually expanded into the backend and the wider engineering ecosystem.

Today, I enjoy working on the bigger picture of a product - not just how it looks, but how it works, scales, and fits together. I focus on building clean, intuitive interfaces backed by reliable APIs and well-structured systems, while keeping performance, usability, and maintainability in mind. Over the years, I've worked on everything from public-facing websites and mobile applications to complex business platforms and internal systems. I've also had the opportunity to lead teams, work directly with clients, and take ownership of projects from idea and architecture through development and delivery.
